SUMMARY

At its twenty-ninth session, the Statistical Commission adopted revised international recommendations for (a) construction statistics, (b) international trade statistics, (c) international migration statistics, and (d) population and housing censuses. The Commission also adopted a revised Central Product Classification.

In following up the statistical implications of recent major United Nations conferences, the Commission adopted the Minimum National Social Data Set (MNSDS), consisting of 15 indicators. The Commission emphasized that the 15 MNSDS indicators should be considered as a minimum and not a maximum list of indicators, and invited users to build on MNSDS to meet national needs and circumstances, as well as requirements in specific fields.

The Commission reviewed a number of initiatives that groups of countries and international organizations are undertaking on a range of critical issues in economic statistics, such as best practices for official statistics, globalization, informal sector statistics and other issues. In particular, the Commission:

(a) Agreed on the need to conduct an evaluation of the International Comparison Programme (ICP) to address the reservations held by some countries about ICP implementation and the uses of ICP results, and to seek ways to improve the credibility of ICP data;

(b) Appointed a steering committee to supervise the evaluation process.

The Commission agreed that the Task Force on Industrial and Construction Statistics had largely accomplished its goals and should therefore be discontinued. It also agreed that the task forces on national accounts, international trade statistics, environment statistics, service statistics and finance statistics (the latter with an amendment to its terms of reference) should continue their work.

The Commission supported a draft recommendation that will be before the Council of the World Customs Organization in June 1997, requesting all countries that use the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System to supply their international trade statistics to the United Nations Statistics Division. In addition, the Commission established a small group of countries and organizations to examine the feasibility of holding a seminar or symposium on good practices in the area of technical cooperation.

The Commission also established a group of countries to explore new approaches to the structure and operation of the Statistical Commission, as well as to the relationship between the regional commissions and the Statistical Commission and other international organizations.

The Commission encouraged all actors in the international statistical system operating in the various fields of statistics, particularly the city groups,* task forces and other ad hoc groups, to make use of current communications technology, such as computer bulletin boards, so as to disseminate information widely and quickly to others who might be interested.

The Commission endorsed the proposed work programme of the United Nations Statistics Division for the biennium 1998-1999. It also endorsed the proposal of the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities to develop a pilot integrated presentation of statistical work plans for use by international agencies and the regional commissions for coordination purposes.

40. The Commission considered item 9 of its agenda at its 487th meeting, on 13 February 1997. It had before it the following documents:

(a) Report of the Task Force on National Accounts (E/CN.3/1997/12, annex);

(a) Commended the milestones defined by the Task Force as an appropriate tool for monitoring progress in the implementation of the 1993 SNA. The Commission suggested that a similar milestone approach be used for the implementation of other international statistical standards;

(b) Agreed with the proposal to present the updated milestone assessment of countries to its future sessions. The Commission recommended that such information be supplemented by annotations prepared by the regional commissions. It also asked that an analysis be prepared of changes occurring in milestone assessments over time;

(c) Recommended that, for medium-term implementation targets, priority attention be given to countries currently in the pre-SNA phase or in phase 1 (as formulated under option 2, "Main macroeconomic aggregates", of the Task Force report; see E/CN.3/1997/12, para. 17). More generally, the needs of special country groups, as mentioned under option 5 (see E/CN.3/1997/12, para. 20), ought to be taken into account. The Commission noted that the options presented were not mutually exclusive, and therefore different approaches might be required in different regions. Accordingly, it was suggested that the above recommendations be implemented in a flexible manner;

(d) Endorsed the proposed support system for the Task Force, emphasizing again the importance of making publications available to countries. Particular mention was made of the need to develop guidelines and data for the household sector, including the informal sector;

(e) Decided that the new United Nations data questionnaire for national accounts, based on the 1993 SNA, should be implemented in 1999;

(f) Stressed the importance of functional classifications, and agreed with the proposed programme for their development and dissemination;

(g) Endorsed the suggestion contained in paragraph 33 of the Task Force report to make concrete proposals for a process of updating the 1993 SNA for the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination. The Commission recommended that both the need for a streamlined process and the need for adequate consultation be taken into account.

Chapter IX

49. The Commission took note of the activities and progress made by IMF in the specialized statistical systems on balance of payments, monetary and financial statistics and government finance statistics, and also took note of efforts to harmonize concepts and definitions in these areas of finance statistics with the 1993 SNA.

50. The Commission endorsed the proposal contained in the report of the Task Force to amend the terms of reference of the Task Force in order to incorporate a request that work programmes of international organizations in the field of finance statistics be presented periodically as a means of providing updated information and as the basis of discussion on particular issues.

Chapter X
